Question 5

Corruption in today's scenario is amongst the major in the developing countries. One of the reasons why countries such as India and China haven't been able to come at same level with the developed nations even after having a pool of minds is that corruption lies at the core of these countries. The general public in India is forced to indulge corrupt practices at various phases in life. One of these is the time when the parents want to get their children admitted to a good school. School admission is a major problem especially in the country's capital, Delhi. Good education is the right of every child but is acquiring education a smooth process for children? The first step itself is extremely difficult. Parents struggle to get their children admitted to good schools. Schools demand donations to give admission to children. The government is very well aware about the corrupt means adopted by the schools to extract money. However, it does not take any strict action to stop the same. The is not much different when the students go for university admissions. Children of big businessmen and celebrities get admission easily because of the power of money while those who deserve have actually worked hard for the admission and have to suffer. Such practices must be stopped. Our nation can grow and flourish only when the problem of corruption is eradicated.

An increasing growth rate of human population has led to a population in countries like India. With increasing health care facilities and life expectancy, and an increasing birth rate and death rate, there has been an increasing growth rate of human population. Population explosion leads to pressure on the available limited resources. Population explosion has the increase in agricultural production, housing facilities and health care facilities to meet the increased demand. Increase in agricultural output has been attempted by intensive cultivation, use of large amounts of chemical fertilizers and pesticides, and developing of genetically modified crops. This has resulted in various adverse effects. The need for increasing agricultural produce has resulted in the clearing of forests and utilizing the land thus available for growing crops. Deforestation has caused imbalance. Increased use of chemical fertilizers and pesticides to increase crop output has also had a deleterious effect on the soil, the food chain and human health. Similarly, habitats like forests and grasslands have been cleared for creating housing facilities for people. High rise buildings are also built extensively to meet the high demand for housing. Likewise, the demand on limited resources like drinking water, fuel for heating in wintertime, and automobile fuel for transport puts a heavy strain on the resources. A large population also results in a high rate of unemployment as there may not be enough jobs to meet the high demand. A large population thus a country's social, economic and environmental health.

Question 3

Floods are caused in water bodies as well as on land. When rains are very heavy or last for many days water bodies may receive more water than they can hold or more than their Water then floods the water bodies, and also its banks. The flooding of the water body then causes the land that lies beyond the water body, which is otherwise dry, to get flooded. Floods are, of course, a natural phenomenon. But factors are also responsible for the incidences such as floods. For example, when trees are felled, and forests are cleared indiscriminately there is ecological damage. As trees help in holding the soil, when they are cut off the top soil becomes loose and gets easily away when there are rains. This leads to silting of water bodies like lakes and rivers, and subsequently to flooding. The towns and cities in the of the water bodies, also experience floods then. Floods are also an outcome of poor drainage systems in modern urban areas where there is a high density of human population. The cities' drains get clogged by the huge amounts of domestic garbage that also includes plastic waste. As plastic is non-biodegradable it remains without getting decomposed. When there are and continuous rains for some days the drains get totally choked leading to floods in the cities. Floods cause loss to life and property. Villages, towns and cities in coastal regions and near the banks of rivers are more vulnerable to floods.

Question 2

Girls' education and gender equality are the part of broader and holistic efforts made by the World Bank Group. It promotes girls' education and that girls do not suffer unreasonably in poor and family due to lack of support and care. It also works towards advancing the skills and creating job opportunities for young girls and women. Girls have equal to education; though education system may vary in curriculum, administration and personnel, but it has a strong influence on the students they serve. Gradually, women are their independence, using their rights for creating education and job opportunities for themselves. Gender inequality is clearly one of the important roadblocks in girls' education. Many communities in India still believe that boys are the only of their culture and tradition; and girls are born to serve within the four walls of a home. Hence, it is important that holistic approach is adopted in order to encourage gender equality in each and every sphere whether it's home, office or any other government institution, etc. The open and honest discussion on girls' education and women empowerment can actually prove to be a solution to violence against females. Education will not only make them independent, but will also their sound mental development and give them a stronger personality.

We do many different activities each day, and we need to do them on time.

We have a fixed time to go to school each morning. We need to take the bus or go by bike or by foot and reach the school on time. If we are not punctual we lose out on completing all the activities we need to.

If we manage our time we can accomplish all the activities and tasks we wish to. This requires drawing up a time table. If we can stick to the time table we can then succeed in achieving our goals whether they are in the short term or long term. It is important that we draw up a time table that we can adopt practically. If it is impracticable we get disappointed and and discard it completely. Therefore, a time table must be one that we can go by. We also need to our activities. If we give attention to the most important tasks we can achieve our long term goals easily. On the other hand, if we spend time on tasks or on useless activities we reduce the productive time available for the important activities. We also need to out the time of the day when we are most productive and complete important tasks at that time. For instance, the mind is the most refreshed after a good night's sleep, and that is when we can devote our time to doing our studies.

Question 5

One must keep one's goals in sight and work toward reaching it. Discipline helps one reach one's goal. Discipline can be by working in a systematic manner. For this one must keep one's space of work neat and This gives clarity to one's mind too. It is best to do one thing at a time. This helps in the efficient completion of the task at hand. Doing many together creates unnecessary confusion, and one cannot derive the best from doing many activities at the same time. It is good to draw up a practicable time-table according to the goal one wants to achieve. Drawing up a schedule for each day for oneself makes it easy to be disciplined. One must stick to the time-table one draws for oneself otherwise the purpose is defeated. When one is one cannot be disciplined. The attainment of one's goals also becomes difficult. Discipline requires that one follow the rules according to the activity one is in. If one is driving on the road, for instance, traffic rules need to be obeyed. Similarly, at school, one needs to the rules that are laid down for students by the school.

While much public attention is given to identifying and measuring the of chemicals, the amount of exposure is equally important. Even very toxic substances can do no harm if we are not exposed to them in sufficient amounts. The first step in exposure assessment is to determine possible pathways by which toxic chemicals may reach humans. The three most important pathways are inhalation (air transport), eating (food transport), and drinking (water transport). Pathways can involve many steps, and many substances have a number of different, often complex pathways. In the case of exposure by food, a property is the tendency toward bio concentration. Bio concentration (sometimes called bioaccumulation or bio magnification) is the tendency of a substance to in living tissue; it involves two steps. First, an organism takes in substance, but does not or metabolize it. Then, a predator eats that organism and in the process ingests the substance already accumulated by its prey. This second step is common in fishes, shellfishes, carnivores such as eagles and cats, and other organisms that prey on smaller organisms so that the chemical is by passage through the food pyramid. Mollusks, such as scallops, are exceptionally to bio concentration because they feed by filtering millions of tiny plankton from the water.

Question 5

Proteins are the polymers of amino acids which constitute the structural unit of protoplasmic organelles, enzymes, and other macromolecules of biological importance. It serves as the energy source and source of nitrogen for body of organisms. Proteins in plants are synthesized within the body cells through a genetically controlled machinery by the of nuclear DNA and Ribosomes. DNA produces messenger RNA by transcription. The sequence of m-RNA translates specific sequence of Amino Acids to produce a polypeptide chain which later post synthetic processing transformed into primary, secondary and tertiary proteins essential for maintenance of life in a cell. DNA acts as the central of protein synthesis and which especially controlled by genes present on DNA. In a protein amino acids link together by polypeptide bond in which the carboxyl group of one amino group of the other and so on. Ribosomal enzymes help in of peptide bond and acts as the site for protein synthesis. The sequence of twenty different amino acids on a peptide chain is by the sequence of triplet bases on the m-RNA.

Question 1

In most natural disasters, particularly in rural areas the number of animal deaths are very high, especially in residential areas, due to the fact that most animals are kept tied up, and in the event of a disaster while the people urgently, the animals left tied up have no chance of voluntary escape. As a result, they often perish. Disposal of dead animals is as important as that of humans because decaying dead bodies can be a health and environment threat. Still, this aspect is usually lower priority, more so in case of stray animals. The rescuers are not willing to handle animal carcasses. Yet, this must be done expeditiously by local volunteers till the authorities take charge and get the carcasses disposed. Disposal is best done by, at some place outside the inhabited areas. At such times, nobody should be allowed to hold on to the dead bodies for extraction of hides or bones or any other recoverable material, because the health threat is very high, and quickest disposal of the dead bodies is desirable. While burying the carcass, quick lime should be added as it will hasten the process and control the spread of any possible infection.

Question 3

Public speaking is an art; and, like every other art, it has to be learnt, both in practice and theory. For a man to say that he will never a speech until he has learnt to speak is like saying that he will never go into the water until he has learnt to swim. One cannot learn to swim with-out going into the water, and one can never learn to speak in public without speaking in public. In both cases, one has to learn by practice; and no amount of theory without practice will be of any A speech should always be carefully prepared before-hand. Preparation includes collection, selection and arrangement. First, collect materials for the speech—ideas, arguments, facts, illustrations bearing on the subject. Jot these down as they come to mind. Then select the most appropriate the rest. Lastly, arrange the selected thoughts in an orderly and logical plan. Without all this, the speech will be badly arranged,, dis proportioned and full of repetitions. In public speaking the management of the voice is very important. Some speakers speak too low and cannot be heard well in a large hall. Some shout, and their voices are by the echoes. Some talk so fast that they cannot be followed; and some speak so slowly as to tire their hearers' patience. The speaker should speak clearly, for all to hear; he should vary the of his voice to avoid monotony and to enforce his meaning; and he should know when to make effective pauses. A speaker should watch his audience and speak to it directly, so as to "get across" to his hearers what he wants to say as persuasively and convincingly as possible.

Question 4

Though the British intensified their policy of repressing the Extremists, they simultaneously also tried to the Moderates through certain reforms. In AD 1909, they announced the Indian Councils Act, popularly known as the Morley-Minto Reforms. The reforms were named after Lord Morley, the Secretary of State for India and Lord Minto, the Indian Viceroy. Firstly, The membership of the Central Legislative Council and the Provincial Legislative Councils was..... . However, less than half of the members were elected members. Also, the elected members were not to be elected by the people but by the influential sections of the society such as landlords, zamindars and businessmen. Secondly, The system of separate was introduced. The Muslims were grouped into separate constituencies form where only Muslim candidates could contest elections. Thiswas made to cut-off the Muslims from the national movement by treating them as separate from the rest of the nation and to prevent Hindu-Muslim unity, something which the Congress had been trying to nurture. No significant improvement was introduced by these reforms. The British refused the Indian demand for 'swaraj'. The Congress opposed the creation of separate electorates for the Muslims. This system of separate electorates for the Muslims sowed the seeds of the policy of communalism.

Predictably, the capital's citizen are gung-ho about being on top of the heap. But hang on. It is important to place the ranking in perspective. A survey conducted by Mercer Human resource Consulting which included 215 cities – ranked Delhi a lowly 148, Mumbai 151 and the IT hub Bangalore, at 153. None of our metros can claim to offer a minimum decent standard of living. Specific services such as health care, transport, housing and are in a holy mess. Cities due to inept planning do not have the infrastructure and resources to accommodate the migrant influx. Radical changes have to be wheeled in quickly in order to avoid a series of impending disasters. Urban is bound to increase as India's economy expands. One way of easing the pressure on the metros is to focus on developing infrastructure and public services in tier-2 cities, making them an attractive destination.

Question 1

The word democracy is from a conjunction of two Greek words "demos" meaning people and "kasha" which means rule. Thus democracy is when people choose to rule themselves or in the words of Abraham Lincoln,

"government by the people, of the people, for the people". Obviously everyone in the country cannot possible take part in the government so the people elect those by whom they want to be governed. What is criticism? Any opinion against the scheme is criticism. Criticism can be of two types – constructive and destructive. The purpose of criticism is to improve the present for the good of all. This is a positive approach. Destructive criticism is usually criticism for the sake of criticism. It is a negative approach which is disconcerting at the individual level and destructive in general. Constructive criticism is a must for all democracies. It encourages participation in the government, which is the hallmark of any democracy. Moreover, it the politicians to accept responsibility for their actions and gauge the public response. It is a system of feedback by which the public pulse can be felt. When these forms are alive and active we may say democracy

When a cell is kept in water or in a solution less than the cell sap, water enters the cell. This increases the volume of the cell and the protoplasm pressure against the cell wall. As a result of this the cell wall becomes This state of the cell is termed turgid condition. Turgidity is the fully expanded condition of a cell with its wall stretched due to excessive accumulation of water. The pressure exerted by the cell fluid on the cell wall is called turgor pressure. The inward pressure exerted on the cell contents by the stretched cell wall is called wall pressure. Normally these two pressures counterbalance each other and a state of is maintained between them. Three factors influence the turgidity of a living cell. These are: (a) formation of osmotically active substances inside the cell, (b) an adequate supply of water, and (c) a semi-permeable membrane. It helps in the movement of nutrient solutions from cell to cell. This is because of the difference in the concentration of the cell between one cell and the other. It is necessary for the growth of different organs.

Question 4.

Good sense appears to have (1) at last. With a fresh set of draft rules to replace last year's poorly conceived ones, the Centre has sought to withdraw the ban on sale of cattle for slaughter in animal markets. The draft rules are now open for comments and suggestions. When the Union Ministry for Environment, Forests and Climate Change notified the rules under the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act on May 23, 2017, there was (2) that in the name of preventing cruelty to animals and regulating (3) markets the government was surreptitiously throttling the cattle trade and furthering the BJP's cow protection agenda. The rules were criticised for restricting legitimate animal trade and interfering with (4) habits. The new draft makes a welcome departure from the earlier rules, seeking to provide great relief to buyers of animals from (5) paperwork and procedural requirements. Some distance-specific conditions to curb inter-State and cross-border movement of animals are to be dropped, as also rules barring animal markets within 25 km of a State border and 50 km of the international boundary. The definition of 'animal markets' will no more include any lairage (6) a slaughter-house, thereby removing curbs on the sale of animals in a resting place in the vicinity of a market. The draft retains good provisions in the earlier notification barring cruelty in the treatment and transport of animals.

The notification had set off a (7) last year, with some Chief Ministers stridently opposing it on the ground that regulating (8) trade was essentially a State subject. Even assuming that the Centre had jurisdiction under the law against animal cruelty to notify the rules, it was obvious that only the States could enforce them. With the Supreme Court expanding a stay granted by the Madras High Court into a nation-wide bar on the rules, and some States taking a clear stand that they would not implement the regulations, the notification was a non-starter. There was further concern whether the regulations would adversely impact poor villagers, as animal markets are (9) in the countryside. There was an impression that under the guise of stiff regulations, the Centre was making it impossible for cattle, a term that covers cows, buffalo, bulls and camels, to be slaughtered even for food, despite the PCA Act recognising explicitly that animals can be food for humans. The meat trade, valued at thousands of crores of rupees, would have suffered a serious setback had the rules been implemented. Any transformation from a tendency to advance pet causes to an approach based on economic and legal considerations would be a welcome change. Good governance is not only about regulating human and economic activities, but also about avoiding (10) of sectarianism.

Question 5.

As international oil prices head higher, India will have to ..(1).. itself for the economic risks of expensive energy. Brent crude oil futures were trading at about $70 a barrel on Friday, marking a four-year high and a price increase of close to 6% since the start of the year. The rise in international prices has been particularly sharp given that oil had been selling at below $45 in June. This is a rally of about 55% in a matter of just months. Oil price ..(2).. have often been explained by changes in the supply outlook ..(3).. by the decisions of major oil producers. Oil trading at $70 should offer some ..(4).. to traditional oil producers like the OPEC members, which have suffered the ..(5).. of U.S. shale producers. According to the IMF, last year, for instance, Saudi Arabia would break even on its budget with oil at $70. The recent spurt in oil prices, however, seems to be more the result of a weakening of the U.S. dollar than anything else. The dollar has been gradually weakening against major global currencies since the beginning of last year. But the trend was given a new push following comments by U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in favour of a weak-dollar policy. At Davos this week, Mr. Mnuchin noted that a weaker dollar would be good for American trade. However, given that the U.S. is right in the middle of a monetary tightening cycle, it is unlikely that the dollar will continue to boost oil prices, unless the Federal Reserve slows the projected pace of interest rate increases.

Consumers in India are already beginning to feel the pinch as petrol and diesel prices have hit multi-year highs. The retail selling price of both petrol and diesel in Delhi, for instance, has risen by close to ₹3 a litre since the ..(6).. of 2018. The rise in domestic fuel prices is on expected lines given the policy of dynamic daily pricing of petrol and diesel ..(7).. by the Centre. But as rising oil prices put pressure on domestic consumers, the government will have to ..(8).. from ..(9).. to subsidies to ease the pain. It should work towards rationalising taxes on petrol and diesel to bring down retail prices. This will help consumers without ..(10).. an undue burden on the oil marketing companies.
